Description

Organized in collaboration with the Université Gustave Eiffel in Paris and based on the legacy of the « Copenhagen Summer School » (held since 2003), this summer school aims to promote sport history but also more broadly social and human sciences used to analyse the sport phenomena.

This course aims to provide a unique environment for PhD students who seek to develop skills around sport history, and to improve their network in the field. Lectures given by leading experts will cover specific methodological aspects and new issues in the field of sport history. Participants will also have the opportunity to present and discuss their own research in specific sessions.

The summer school in 2023 will be held in Lausanne on the campus of the University of Lausanne, in a fantastic environment both for its amazing views on the Alps and its role in the governance of international sports, along the presence of the International Olympic Committee (IOC) and more than 50 international sports federations and organisations.

Course format

Focused on PhD students' work, the pedagogical approach of the school is based both on lectures, discussing very specific methodological aspects and new issues in Sport history, and on workshops where articles or chapters submitted prior to the school will be discussed in small groups. Leading experts in the field will be lecturing and chairing the workshops, and informal discussion sessions will allow participants to have further discussions with them regarding their PhD topic.

The programme also includes sessions on publications opportunities, on careers paths and writing processes as well as a visit from the city of Bern (inclusive a visit at the Swiss shooting museum) and in Lausanne at the Olympic archives.

Through these activities, the school aims to offer a rewarding scientific and human experience.

Objectives

At the end of the summer school, the participants should have:

- Discovered new epistemological approaches and new methodologies in sport sciences;
- Benefited from exchanges with other young scholars;
- Exchanged with influential and recognized professors of the field;
- Strengthened their writing skills;
- Improved their soft skills.

Participants will get 3ECTS for their participation, along with a certificate of attendance
